HISTORY IN THE MAKING— WORLD EVENTS REVIEWED

Kennedy Appoints

Two men were appointed by President Kennedy to head important government agencies.

Both are business men and both are Republicans — a political point that emphasizes the bipartisan nature of their agencies.

John A. McCone will be the new director of the Central Intelligence Agency. He succeeds the retiring Allen W. Dulles, who served in various capacities under eight Presidents, beginning with Woodrow Wilson in World War I. Dulles had been director of the C. I. A. since 1953. His brother, the late John Foster Dulles, had been Secretary of State.

McCone, fifty-nine, began his career as a construction engineer. During World War II he was head of the California Shipbuilding Corporation, that built 467 ships valued at a billion dollars. He was chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission from 1958 until last January.
